TAYLOR A WINNER.

Harmony Reigns in Lexington and All Will Unite in Support of Popular Candidate—Contest of Last Year Ends in Good Fellowship.

That George W. Taylor, of Lexington, will be the next selectman of the town is one of the certainties of the coming town election, scheduled for March 3. In fact those who were opposed to Mr. Taylor a year ago, or at least a large number of them, are not at all averse to his candidacy and believe that the election of Mr. Taylor will do more to complete the harmony which has been surely on the way than any other thing could do. Since the memorable contest less than a year ago, when two elections were required to determine who should be selectman of the town, it has been a steadily growing opinion that the defeated candidate of last year should this year be given hearty support by all sides. Thus would the leaders of the contest be together on the board, all sides would be represented and harmony would be complete. Such a happy termination to last year's contest has of late more than ever been urged on the board, so that the feeling can safely be said to be very strong in favor of Mr. Taylor. It is not known as yet if there are to be any opposition candidates, but this is not believed to be a probable occurrence.

The fact that Mr. Taylor stepped into the gap when a candidate was needed to test a legal position has made him the natural and logical candidate. Mr. Taylor's long residence and associations in Lexington insure the citizens that if they elect him his purpose and ambition will be to have the best interests of the town always in mind. He is a shrewd, energetic and successful business man, unhampered by any local associations adverse to the town's welfare, and even his former antagonists admit he has a strength, courage and straightforwardness which is always desirable. Seldom, if ever, can a man be found whose qualifications can satisfy everyone, but if the sentiment of Lexington inclines anything it shows that the present Mr. Taylor's candidacy is more nearly than that of any other one man, meets the desires of the people.

Lexington must consider and decide many important questions in the near future, among which are metropolitan sewerage and water and the double tracking of Massachusetts avenue, and the town, if it is wise, will see to it that its strongest and ablest men are placed in office—men whose natural qualifications and business experience as well will enable them to render the town the best possible service. Not every successful business man thinks and feels as Mr. Taylor does, and he is willing to devote much time to the administration of town affairs and when one is found, as appears in this case, the Enterprise congratulates the people of Lexington for their intention to elect in giving Mr. Taylor their hearty and earnest support.

WELL FILLED HOUSE.

A well filled house greeted the entertainment of the town hall, Tuesday evening. The affair was under the direction of the Young Men's league of Arlington Heights, assisted by members of the Y. M. C. A. of Cambridge. The entertainment consisted of a variety of numbers and all were appreciated by those in attendance.

The orchestra, consisting of violin, cornet and flute, gave choice selections. F. O. Harrell rendered a variety of selections on the Swiss bells, musical glasses and the saxophone. The violin solo by Master Lewis Kaufman was well done. Other numbers were: Vocal selection, "She's a flower from the fields of Alabama," selection by the Kaufman trio; mandolin solo by Master Lewis Kaufman. This first annual entertainment of the Young Men's league was successful in every way.

The town hall was very tastefully decorated with festoons of blue and white colors of the Young Men's league, and the stars and stripes.

ASH WEDNESDAY.

Special services were held at the Roman Catholic and Episcopal churches of Arlington, on Ash Wednesday. At St. Agnes' church at 8 o'clock mass was celebrated, and at the evening service Rev. J. M. Mulcahy preached on the observances of Lent. According to the usual custom ashes were distributed to the people by the priests.

At St. John's church good congregations were present at 10.30 a.m. and 7.45 p.m. At the first services there were morning prayer, litany and a short address, and in the evening the rector, Rev. Jas. Yeames, preached on "The Use and Meaning of Lent."

ARLINGTON BOAT CLUB.

Medford took all three games from the Arlington Boat club on the latter's alleys in the Mystic Valley league, Tuesday night. The score: Medford-H. 13-0; total 53; Chandler, 52; Brown, 58; Glasier, 45; Barker, 48; team total, 268; Arlington B. C.—H. I. Durgin, 45; Homer, 52; Brooks, 54; Ruger, 50; W. Durgin, 54; team total, 250.

Phillip Herrick, a government employee in the Philippine Islands, has been stopping in Arlington as the guest of his uncle, Joshua G. Dodge. He is a willing talker on the subject of the Philippines, and believes there is a future in store for them. The climate he enjoys, the heat not being excessive. The soil may be made productive, while mining and the lumber interests may be made to pay. He believes there is money to be made there.

PIGGERY QUESTION.

Is the Pen Mightier Than the By-law—Arlington Men in Court and Cases Continued for Two Weeks.

At last the piggery question which has been a topic of interest in Arlington for some months has reached the courts, and it remains to be seen whether the town by-laws which have decreed that the piggeries shall go can be enforced against the owners of the pens. The question appears to be, "Is the pen mightier than the by-law?" At the Cambridge court, Thursday morning, Warren W. Rawson, George D. Moore, Edward H. Cutter, Charles S. Cutter and David Irwin appeared on complaint of Chief of Police Harriman and Officer Daniel M. Hooley. The charge was for keeping more than five swine excessive of offspring less than four months old. Upon request, the case was continued until Feb. 25. Cutter brothers and Irwin were represented by counsel.

BELMONT.

HEALTH MEASURE.

At a meeting held Feb. 7th, 1902, the board of health of the town of Belmont adopted and hereby publishes the following regulation for the public health and safety:

Reg. 13. The exercise of the trade or employment of excavating clay for the purpose of manufacturing bricks, (except upon the premises now owned and operated by the New England Brick Co.), is hereby prohibited within the limits of the town of Belmont, except in accordance with the written permit to be first granted by the Board of Health of said town.

Any person, firm or corporation desiring to exercise said trade or employment within the limits of said town, must make written application for a permit to said Board of Health, subject to its approval, and must describe in said application the premises upon which the applicant desires to exercise said trade or employment, and must state the times when and within which the applicant desires to exercise said trade or employment, and also the depth and area of the excavation or excavations said applicant desires to make.

Said Board will not grant such permit unless said applicant shall first furnish a bond with good and sufficient sureties (the amount of said bond, and said sureties, to be satisfactory to said Board, running to the Town of Belmont, and conditioned upon the observance by said applicant of the terms of said permit and also upon the filling in, within a reasonable time, to be fixed by said Board, with proper materials and in a manner satisfactory to said Board, any excavation or excavations to be made by said applicant.

JOHN FENDERSON,
WM. LYMAN UNDERWOOD,
Belmont Board of Health.

Monday evening climaxed the anticipation of the members and friends of St. Joseph's parish, of Belmont, when they assembled, to the number of 700, in the town hall, at a second annual reunion. Among these were many clergymen from adjacent cities and towns, and the officials of Belmont and leading citizens.

Attention is called to a new regulation which has just been passed by the board of health. This regulation prohibits the further extension of brickyard clay pits within the town limits unless the brick companies will guarantee to fill in the excavations as soon as made. There is no longer any doubt but that abandoned clay pits with their accumulation of stagnant water, are a menace to the public health, and this being the case, the new ordinance should meet with general approval.

The Waverley Unitarian society invites its friends to a platform meeting to be held in the church at 7.30 tomorrow evening. The subject will be "Our Gospel." Addresses by Rev. James Ellis, of Boston, Rev. W. F. Greenman, of Watertown, and Rev. Mr. Allen.

The annual town meeting will be held in the town hall, Monday, March 3.

The Belmont Tennis club will hold a social dancing party in the town hall, this evening.

G. Louis Foster returned last Friday from a two weeks' business trip through Maine.

In addition to the regular one year officers of the board of selectmen, town clerk, town treasurer, and town auditor, which must be nominated at the town caucuses, next Tuesday, there is the following list to be nominated to fill vacancies, which will be made this year by expiration of elected terms: school committee, Mrs. Melitable Frost; Rev. Geo. P. Gilman, trustees public library, G. C. Holt, J. Henry Fletcher, registrar of voters, G. Fred Kendall; water commissioner, Irving B. Frost; commissioner sinking fund, G. C. Holt; commissioner public burial ground, Frank E. Chant; board of health, Geo. A. Prentiss; tree warden, Harold L. Frost; assessor, Thos. W. Davis, and the term of Horace D. Stone, originally made vacant by death.

FOR A HOSPITAL.

Mrs. Sarah Van Ness to Bequeath the Handsome Van Ness Mansion and Surrounding Grounds to the Town of Lexington.

Mrs. Sarah Bowman Van Ness, widow of the late Joseph Van Ness, of East Lexington, has, so it is stated on good authority, made a bequest in her will, which was recently made, of the beautiful Van Ness estate, including the mansion and surrounding grounds, to the town of Lexington for the purpose of a hospital. The property is exceedingly valuable and one of the most desirable in this section, and the bequest is understood to be free and unhampered. That is, there are no restrictions which might prove burdensome to the town, except, of course, that it shall be for a hospital. Mr. Van Ness, it will be remembered, died last July, and in his will five and one-half acres of land was given to the town of Lexington. There were no encumbrances upon this except that if it is accepted by the town it is to be used for a park to be known as "Bowman park." The land is situated within the angle at the junction of Pleasant and Watertown streets, and the town will decide whether to accept the gift or not at the coming town meeting. The land adjoins the Van Ness estate which is to be for the hospital according to the will of Mrs. Van Ness.

Mr. Van Ness was a great lover of nature and of beauty in all its forms, and the estate which now belongs to his widow is magnificent. It received the personal oversight of its former owner when he was able to look out for it and make such plans as he desired, and the effect of his years of perfecting arrangements will be lasting.

The Twenty-one Associates, of Arlington, gave a largely attended dancing party in the hall in their new Associates building, on Massachusetts avenue, last Saturday evening. So many were present that dancing was a little crowded, but everyone was in the best of spirits, and an especially jolly time was had. Square dances had a prominent place in the order, and this somewhat of a novelty in Arlington made the affair the more pleasant, as so many of the older ones present took part in them. Custer's orchestra of five pieces was at its best, and a program of up-to-date popular selections was played for the dancing.

George H. Richardson, of Pleasant street, was in New York over Sunday.

A STORY OF FORREST.

How the Peppery Actor Squared Accounts With One Critic.

Many years ago Edwin Forrest, the celebrated actor, when in New York, was in the habit of dining at Windust's, a noted restaurant on Park row that was a favorite resort of actors and literary men. It usually happened that Forrest would be joined by friends and that the little group would sit together at one table. On one occasion it chanced that an Englishman with a reputation for conceit and impertinence, who had scraped acquaintance with the tragedian, was one of the group.

Early in the course of the dinner the Englishman began to make criticisms which he considered pleasant, but which Forrest's conception of certain roles. Encouraged by his own appreciation he gave full play to his humor and concluded each of his impertinences with, "Pardon my freedom, sir; it's my way." To the astonishment of all who knew Forrest's irascible disposition he bore the Briton's offensive remarks patiently and seemingly ignored them as far as possible. When, however, the nuts were brought in by the waiter, he took several cracked walnuts in his hand and, walking over to the Briton's place, jocularly snapped them successively in the face of that individual, lightly saying after each shot, "Pardon my freedom, sir; it's my way," and snapped him out of the restaurant.

Growsome Football Legend.

Where did football originate? Some people give ancient Chester, in England, credit for bringing the great winter pastime into existence. There is a record of football playing in that city in the year 1540, but Chesterians believe in a legend of much earlier date.

In the tenth century, it is said, a Dane was captured and beheaded by the citizens. Some one began kicking the head about the streets, others followed, and it was discovered that this formed a new and decidedly fascinating sport. This was repeated whenever possible, but as enemies' heads became scarcer and the entertainment of kicking them more difficult to procure it was at last arranged "for the shoemakers yearly on Shrove Tuesday to deliver to the draper, in the presence of the mayor of Chester, one ball of leather, called a football, of the value of 3s. 4d. or above."

There is evidently a fine precedent for those concerned in the game "losing their heads."

Miracles of Warfare.

Until war ceases, which will be the greatest miracle of all, it will always be the exhibition ground of miracles. How can a bullet puncture a man's coat behind and before or piece his boot and sock and be gravely shaken out of both without wounding him? And what mysterious channel does this human body contain which leads a bullet dexterously around the heart, a hail's breadth from the seat of life, yet never rending it—a phenomenon vouched for by more than one army surgeon? Shells have burst thunderously between the very legs of soldiers and left them still soldiers. Pom-pom shells of two inches diameter have passed through legs and arms without shattering the bone or bursting at the impact, though there appears to be literally no room for such a merciful performance. In fact, a history of the escapes in war would be wild reading even after a course of Munchausen.

A New Danger.

A story is told in a neighboring town, says the Troy Press, of the well meant efforts to do his duty of a hostler employed by a local doctor. It so happened that the doctor was attending two cases on the same street, one house which had just been blessed by an heir and in the other existed a slight case of scarlet fever.

The doctor instructed his man to take a "contagious disease" card and tack it up on the house where lived the fever patient. Unfortunately the messenger made a mix up in the location of the house, and what was the astonishment of passersby to read on the house where cooed a lusty newborn infant: "Contagious Disease. Keep Out."

A Thousand Million Suns.

Lord Kelvin once made some interesting calculations of the probable total amount of gravitation matter in the visible universe. He showed that if 25,000,000 years ago 1,000,000,000 masses, each equal to our sun, had been distributed through a sphere about 18,000,000,000 miles in radius they would now have acquired velocities about equal to those known to be possessed by the stars visible to us. Therefore it is probable that the total amount of gravitational matter in the visible universe does not differ much from that of 1,000,000,000 suns.

Sounded Familiar.

"You wretch! You miscreant! You worst of villains!" exclaimed the heroine at rehearsal. The heavy villain, who had just joined the company, looked patiently aggrieved and said: "Excuse me, is that in the part or are you acting as stage manager?"—Washington Star.

As Estimate of Society.

Ascum—You don't care much for society, do you? Crabbe—No. Society is nothing but a ridiculous school where every nobody is taught to try to be somebody.—Philadelphia Press.

Not So Sudden.

"Amelia," faltered the young man, "I love you." "Oh, Herbert," she said, clasping her hands together, "what a long, long time it has taken you to say so!"—Chicago Tribune.

PAST HIS FIRST YOUTH.

A Fowl That Was Hardly to Blame For Proving Tough.

The swan is said to be excellent eating when young, but as it is one of the longest lived of all creatures it is well to learn if possible how old your bird is before you cook it.

A gentleman in Lincolnshire, England, sent a dead swan to the Athenaeum club, addressed to the secretary. A special dinner was to occur that week, and the committee without question turned the bird over to the cook.

At the dinner the swan, resting on a great silver dish, was a delight to the eye, but when it came to carving and eating the bird no knife seemed sharp enough to cut it, and of course eating it was out of the question.

A few days later the donor met the secretary and said, "I hope you got my swan all right."

"That was a nice joke you played on us," returned the secretary.

"Joke? What do you mean?"

"Why, we had the thing boiled for thirteen hours, and even then we might as well have tried to cut through the rock of Gibraltar."

"You don't mean to say you had the swan cooked?"

"Why, of course."

"Man alive! I sent it to be stuffed and preserved as a curiosity in the club. That swan has been in my family for 280 years. It was one of the identical birds fed by the children of Charles I. You've seen the picture of it. My ancestor held the post of 'master of the swans and keeper of the king's cygnets.' Well, I have no doubt it was a bit tough."

The "W" in Writers' Names.

Beginning with William Shakespeare, we remember instantly Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir Walter Scott, William Wordsworth, Washington Irving, William Makepeace Thackeray, Henry W. Longfellow, John G. Whittier, William Cullen Bryant, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Oliver Wendell Holmes and Walt Whitman. Others whose names occur almost simultaneously are William Cowper, Isaac Watts, Henry Ward Beecher, Daniel Webster, Wendell Phillips, George William Curtis, Richard Grant White, Julia Ward Howe, George W. Cable, William D. Howells, Charles Dudley Warner and Richard Watson Gilder. To these are easily added Sir Walter Blackstone, John Wesley, Edmund Waller, Nathaniel P. Willis, Walter Savage Landor, Will Carleton, James Whitcomb Riley, Thomas Wentworth Higginson, Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, Hamilton Wright Mable, William H. Prescott, Constance Fenimore Woolson, Mary E. Wilkins and many more.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Country Inns in England.

A noted traveler says he has sampled a large number of hotels in his time—even in Greece—but for barefaced dishonesty in the making of bills the bluff British landlord takes first place. "After charging twice what his food and rooms are worth he tacks on a further charge for service, another for lights, another for bath, another for fire. In short, my experience of country inns in England—and I can speak with some authority—is that I pay as much a day at a shabby little country inn of England, where the food is poor and ill cooked, the attendance inferior and the beds poor, as I would at a good hotel in such towns as Springfield, Mass., or the very best in Switzerland or Germany. Indeed, it must have struck the average American that the incomparable Baedeker hardly ever finds it possible to recommend an English hotel."

The Original Silhouette.

The name silhouette was derived from Etienne de Silhouette, a French minister of finance in 1759, who introduced several parsimonious fashions during his administration called a la Silhouette, a name which continued to be applied to the black profile portraits. Silhouettes were executed in various ways.

One of the simplest is that of tracing the outlines of a shadow's profile thrown on a sheet of paper and then reducing them to the required size either by the eye or by means of a pantograph. The camera obscura and camera lucida are also occasionally used for the purpose.

His Appeal.

Little George was taken by his aunt to see the newcomer, aged one day. He was duly and profoundly impressed with the specimen and asked where the little brother came from. "God sent it," answered the aunt reverently.

The answer made a deep impression on little George, for that afternoon he was seen out in the backyard gazing up into the deep blue sky and spreading his diminutive apron expectantly as he said, "Dear God, please throw me one down too."—Troy Times.

Hardening Steel.

Small steel articles that are too soft may be hardened with sealing wax. The method is to have ready a large stick of sealing wax and then after heating the article to a cherry red thrust it into the wax for a minute, withdrawing it and sticking it in again, repeating the operation until the steel is cold and will not enter the wax.

Baked in a Quarry.

POOL.

There is no more exhilarating pastime to the man who uses his brain excessively than that of pool playing. It furnishes a radical change from the routine of constant thinking in regular channels for it brings into use a diversity of thoughts entirely foreign thereto and therefore recreative in character. Besides, it affords much wholesome physical exercise otherwise. Our pool-room is at 401 Mass. Ave., Arlington, is a retreat for those who would, for a brief time, drive dull care away. It is kept in the most orderly manner and we solicit the patronage of gentlemen. We have no room for idlers or loungers of a social case who can not mingle with gentlemen.

THE BAMBOO HAIR.

A Slow but Sure Poison That is Used by the Javanese.

The young shoots of the bamboo are covered with a number of very fine hairs that are seen under the microscope to be hollow and spiked like bayonets. These hairs are commonly called bamboo poison by the white men resident in Java for the reason that murder is frequently committed through their agency.

When a Javanese woman takes a fancy to a European, according to an official Dutch report, she will either have him or poison him if she gets the chance. She seeks any and every opportunity of mixing these infinitesimal hairs among his food, and they serve the purpose of irritating the whole length of the alimentary canal and setting up malignant dysentery. It may take a long time and many doses of this so called poison to effect the purpose, but the native woman does not tire, and death will surely result. The male native will also try this method of revenge for an affront.

The planters know all this and dread the bamboo hair, but it is always difficult to determine whether the dysentery is caused by the poison or comes about naturally. When a planter finds himself a prey to attacks of that complaint, his best course is to take a voyage to Europe.—Pearson's.

Assorted Voices.

It is a well known fact that voices differ greatly according to nationality and geographical position. Thus, in Russia one hears male voices which are absolutely unique in the lowness of their compass. The Italians, on the other hand, are notable for their fine tenor voices. Some Asiatic nations, according to Engel, sing in shrill notes by straining the voice to its highest pitch. Others delight in a kind of vibrato or tremolando. Some sing habitually in an undertone, others in a nasal tone.

Lichtenstein, in describing the singing of a Hottentot congregation in South Africa, observes that among all the singers, consisting of about 100 Hottentots of both sexes, there was not one man with a bass or baritone voice. All the men had tenor voices. The Chinese voices seem to bear some resemblance to the weak character of the people. A military man who had three years' service in the country declares that he never once heard a Chinaman sing from his chest.—Gentleman's Magazine.

The Laird's Last Drink.

The remark of counsel in a will case the other day that there were two peculiarities about highlanders, their great devotion to the national drink and their power of absorbing whisky without apparently getting the worse for it, recalls the old story of how the laird of Garscadden took his last draft.

A considerable number of lairds had congregated in the chancery of law for the ostensible purpose of talking over some parish business. They talked well and drank still better, and one of them about the dawn of the morning, fixing his eye on Garscadden, remarked that he was "looking unco gash" (very ghastly).

Upon which the laird of Kilmardinny coolly replied: "He has been wi' his Maker these two hours! I saw him step awa', but I didna like to disturb guid company!"—London Chronicle.

Benevolent.

There was not long since a venerable and benevolent judge in Paris who at the moment of passing sentence on a prisoner consulted his associates on each side of him as to the proper penalty to be inflicted. "What ought we to give this rascal, brother?" he said, bending over to the one upon his right. "I should say three years." "What is your opinion, brother?" to the other on his left. "I should give him about four years." The judge (with benevolence)—Prisoner, not desiring to give you a long and severe term of imprisonment, as I should have done if left to myself, I have consulted my learned brothers, and I shall take their advice. Seven years!

New York's Tall Men.

Why are there so many very tall men in New York? is a question often asked by visitors to the city. The peculiarity is so patent that it very soon forces itself on the attention of every casual observer. The men are not the ordinarily tall men of six feet or so that one sees quite as many of in Pittsburg or Chicago as you do in New York, but the men whose heads rise up noticeably out of the crowd wherever they are. What brings them here or what grows them here are questions. They are so plentiful that one can scarcely walk a block down town without meeting several.—New York Letter in Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Earth's Motion.

A public demonstration of the earth's rotary motion is given every Sunday in the building that was formerly the church of the Conservatoire in Paris. A large pendulum hung as high as possible swings with a sweep of about sixty feet. The plane of oscillation remains absolutely invariable in space, and the displacement produced by the rotation of the earth is so regular that a watch can be set in this way.

RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS.

We publish on another page an interesting communication from Alderman Carstein on the question of rapid transit. Its most important feature is his argument regarding the franchise of the Elevated company. He finds that the same section which gives it authority to build an elevated structure in Cambridge (paragraph 3 of section 6 of the acts of 1894, also provides for building a line to Jamaica Plain, and he argues that if the corporation is going to build this route, they can also build through Cambridge, "but if they do not," he says, "then I contend that the contract is broken, and the franchise for this route is void," and the company has no rights for an elevated structure in Cambridge.

The defect in this argument lies in the failure of Mr. Carstein to distinguish between rights and obligations—between "may" and "shall." The section he quotes gives the company the right to build the line to Jamaica Plain, but it imposes no obligation to do so. The language is, "Said corporation may construct lines of elevated railway upon the following locations;" but that did not require it to build upon any of them.

But the provision regarding the Cambridge line is entirely different. Section 15 of chapter 500 of the acts of 1897 says that the corporation "shall" (not "may") join with Cambridge in a petition for a new bridge; "shall" pay a part of its cost; "shall" within six months of the completion of the bridge, apply for a route from the end of the bridge to Brattle square and "shall" construct its railroad over said route within two years after the location is granted. To make it certain that this is done, special authority is given to the city to apply to the supreme court for the enforcement of this provision.

Mr. Carstein's argument fails because he does not notice the distinction between the two laws and between the right to build a line to Jamaica Plain and the obligation to build to Cambridge. If the law had remained as it was passed in 1894, it might have been claimed, possibly, that as the Jamaica Plain route and the Cambridge route were authorized by the same paragraph and in the same sentence, the failure to build the former involved the loss of the right to build the latter. But the right to build in Cambridge rests upon the mandatory provisions of the act of 1897, put into the bill on the demand of the city. The company not only has the right to build in Cambridge, but is compelled to do so. It has no option in the matter, it is unfortunate, but we must face the facts. [Cambridge Chronicle.]

CHINESE HATS.

Queer Head Coverings That Are Worn in the Celestial Empire.

In China the retainers and guards wear special hats to indicate their office. The ensigns wear a wire structure resembling a sugar loaf and a rat-trap. It is a foot high and of no earthly protection against sun or rain. The chair coolies use a hat something like their employers', but flatter, cheaper and without button or feather. The boatmen have a storm hat made of rattan and bamboo, which is never less than a yard in diameter.

A servant who is scribe and valet combined is marked by something that looks like a two storied or three storied cook's cap of four sides. The prevailing color of the structure is vermilion. A mourner wears a turban made by fastening a long cloth of grayish yellow hue around the head and allowing the ends to fall down behind to the small of the back. Another style covers the head, temple, ears and back of the neck and is a caricature upon the steel morions of the middle ages, descendant of those tall hats upon the heads of the captives that are drawn upon the papyrus and tombs of the pharaohs. Still another funny shape is one which looks as if it were the remnant of a felt hat from which the brim had been irregularly torn.

Douglas as a Printer.

Stephen A. Douglas, although not recognized as such by the craft, was a one time printer. The story of how he and "Long John" Wentworth came together on a printing proposition is still afloat, but in such close quarters that it is not often heard. Mr. Wentworth was printing The Democrat in Chicago in 1838 and struggling to remove an indebtedness of about $3,000. Douglas called on him one day and said that he had some handbills that must be printed at once.

"All right," answered Mr. Wentworth, "but the facilities of this office are limited. Do you want ten or a hundred of these bills?"

"The 'Little Giant' said he believed 200 or perhaps more would be needed."

"Very well," was the response. "You will have to turn printer yourself if you expect to get them today."

The bill was set up and placed on the hand press. Then Douglas was given special instructions how to handle the ink roller. A big apron was put on him, and he performed the menial work of roller boy, inking the types, while Mr. Wentworth worked the press.

Criticized the Wrong House.

"I've made bad breaks before, but I certainly eclipsed all previous efforts out in Cleveland the other day," said a well known business man. "A business friend met me at the station and said we would drive around a bit before going to his new home. He slowed up a bit as we drove around a curious looking mansion in which several styles of architecture had been mixed with terrible results. I was forced to exclaim: 'What fool was unkind enough to put up that monstrosity?' 'My host then took me to his club for dinner. He said in explanation: 'We will dine here, because I have a headache, and the fresh paint odor of my new house might make it worse.' 'The next day another friend showed me my first friend's new house. It was the monstrosity of the day before.'—New York Tribune.

A Wily Afghanist.

A man was once condemned in Afghanistan to have his ears sliced off as a minor punishment. He had a powerful friend, however, who was much attached to him. This friend begged the late ameer in duly submissive tones to allow him to perform the operation, a favor which was granted. However, the amateur begged the ameer to show him what portion of each ear he wished to be removed. The ameer accordingly touched them lightly. Whereupon the ingenious—and courageous—person proceeded to quote a passage in the Koran which said that anything touched by the representative of the Almighty became sacred. The despot smiled grimly and forgave them both.

The Kicker.

They're telling a heavenly story which they say no more than does justice to the "kicking" propensities of the Togos veteran.

The old soldier dies, so the story goes, and after death he marches up to the gates of heaven. He hits the door a thump, and St. Peter peers out through the wicket.

"Who are you?" asks the saint. "I'm an old soldier." "Where from?" "Soldiers' home at Togos." "Well, you may come in," says the saint, "but I don't know as the place'll suit you."—Kennebec Journal.

His Hope.

"I hope," said the serious man, "that you haven't been betting on the races." "I hope so, too," said the young man with the red necktie and the restless eye. "I hope I will wake up tomorrow and find out that the whole thing was a wild dream, but there's no use hoping."—Washington Star.

WELL BROKEN HORSES.

The Silent Man Generally Has the Most Manageable Animals.

Has any one ever noticed that a silent man has usually the best broken horses? It may not be true, but all the men of my acquaintance who do not talk much have well broken horses. Drive with them, and you will wonder how they manage their horses. No management is visible. The horse goes where he is wanted without apparent effort on the part of the driver. One famous turfman at least has been noted for his art in driving a horse to the limit of his speed without making a move while his rivals were lifting and yelling and whipping theirs. How did he do it? Don't know, but he was a man of few words.

Probably there is a lesson in this. The average horse understands only a few things thoroughly, only a few words, signs or commands. The silent man gives only a few, and he does not confuse his horse. The horse is made to know them thoroughly. He understands the man who understands him. It is a pleasure to drive a horse that understands. Few pleasures in life can equal it if the horse is a good, cheerful driver. There would be more of this kind if they were made to know a few things thoroughly—the right things.—National Stockman.

How Sousa Got His Name.

When Sousa, a famous world over as king of march music, landed in the "home of the free," he carried with him a valise on which was marked in plain letters "John Philipso, U. S. A." Time passed, and this son of sunny Italy commenced to grow musical and also to become Americanized. It was then, so the story goes, that he expressed the desire for a name more nearly like those of the people of which he was one by choice.

Philipso sounded out of place doing service for a man who had imbibed American beliefs and customs and whose destiny was closely linked with "the stars and stripes forever." A member of the band to which he belonged finally made a suggestion. It turned out to be a happy one and was adopted by the master of the baton. The suggestion was this: To the name Philipso add U. S. A. Divide the one name into two words, and there was the smooth sounding and easily pronounced name of John Philip Sousa.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Fletcher Method for Beginners

New classes are being formed in Somerville, Cambridge, Arlington and Arlington Heights, to begin lessons the weeks of Feb. 3 and Feb. 10. Other classes will be formed at any time when the required number of pupils are obtained. This system was the first of its kind in the United States and Canada to be endorsed by musicians and adopted in musical institutions, and to receive favorable criticism from musical critics. A mother, speaking with much feeling, expressed it as her firm conviction, that the Fletcher method of teaching music was the greatest boon in the direction of child education since the wonderful work of Froebel. WHY IS IT?

Why is it that Sunday seems so unlike any other day of the week to the most of us older grown? It must be that the law of association has much to do with it. There is a quiet pervading atmosphere on that day which is observed on no other. The skies seem a deeper blue and the sun shines with a softer light now, than on a weekday. All nature proclaims the Sabbath. Fifty years ago Sunday was taught and drilled into the children. The day became a part of them. In those days nearly everybody went to church irrespective of the fact whether the minister was liked or disliked. Then, "remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy" was a live commandment. Sunday meant, a half-century ago, a day of rest and a day of worship. Attending church in the forenoon, and then off on the wheel in the afternoon or skimming the ice didn't answer the requirements of the law. The Sabbath was to be kept an unbroken day, and so it is that Sunday now brings to us each week the memories of that New England quiet which was so characteristic of the Lord's day so many years ago. We feel no conscientious scruples in writing this paragraph on a Sunday, for by so doing we are paying our devotion to that New England Sabbath which our fathers so religiously kept.

NO MORE IMPORTANT POSITIONS.

There are no more important positions to be filled at the approaching town meeting than those to be made vacant by the expiration of the terms of Hattie F. Hornblower, John H. Perry and Ida F. Robbins. We have always regarded it a misfortune that the school boards of our suburban towns are so weighted down by a burdensome membership. It is utterly senseless, in our estimation, that the public schools of Arlington should be supervised by a committee of nine—such numbers more or less frequently bring confusion. As the Enterprise has before said in these columns, a school board of three, at the most, would easily meet all the requirements of our educational interests. Two of this board of three should be business men, and one so fitted educationally as to consult with the superintendent concerning subject matter and methods of instruction. But Arlington has at present nine members on her school board, so the next best thing to do is to put in nomination three of her best citizens for the positions to be made vacant.

Let us at no time lose sight of our schools. They are now under an excellent superintendency, and they have an excellent corps of teachers. Our public schools are the boast of the town. Let us keep them so. Turn out to the caucus and individually name your candidate. Don't subscribe to any slate previously made.

THE CITIZENS' CAUCUS.

The Citizens' caucus for the town of Arlington is to be held Wednesday evening, Feb. 19, for the nomination of town officers. If these nominations could be made directly by the people and by means of the Australian ballot a fair expression concerning the several nominees would then be had. This, however, cannot be, so there should be an especial effort made on the part of each voter to be present at the caucus on Wednesday evening. It should be remembered that official position belongs by a sort of decreed right to no man, while on the other hand, the right man belongs to the position. Neither is it in itself true that because one has held an office, it may be for years, that he is therefore entitled to a re-nomination and a re-election. There should be no sentiment in our nominating caucuses and elections. What the public justly demands is that our town officials shall be men who have the ability and honesty to transact the business of the public faithfully and well. It is the imperative duty of Arlington, as well as her privilege, to see that her voters are promptly on hand at the caucus on the evening of Feb. 19th. The following nominations are to be made: One selectman in place of George I. Doe; one assessor in place of Lucian C. Tyler; town clerk, and treasurer and collector in place of Harvey S. Sears; three members of the school board in place of Hattie F. Hornblower, John H. Peary and Ida F. Robbins; and a long list of other candidates are to be named for other less important positions. Now see to it that you attend the caucus.—Wednesday evening, Feb. 19.

BRAVE WORDS.

Those were brave and noble words whereby Walt Whitman in his "Leaves of Grass" declares that "clear and sweet is my soul, and clear and sweet is all that is not my soul." We say "brave and noble words" because it is so unusual for any writer to give the body its due. Practically the thought has been that mind and soul are exalted by ignoring the body. That the soul becomes winged as the body is trampled in the dust. It is only fair to suppose that it required just as much of God's omnipotence to create the body as it did the soul. Man, as he stands out in his threefold creation, is the crowning glory of creative power. When the children shall have been taught that the body is to be made a fit temple for the indwelling of God himself, then can they say with the poet who has been so greatly misunderstood, "clear and sweet is my soul, and clear and sweet is all that is not my soul." Is there, can there, be any reason why the human body should not be exalted as the exquisite workmanship of an infinite artist?

Why then longer fear to speak of this body of ours, and this, too, in the open light of day? Let the children be early taught that there are no lines of symmetry so delicately proportional as are those of the human form. Let them learn without apology, that the body is the fit and royal companion of all that is denominated the higher life. That God has made nothing common or unclean. So that clear and sweet is the soul, and clear and sweet is all that is not the soul.

That man is to be pitied who does not enjoy a good brisk walk. The walks all about Arlington, Lexington and Belmont are picturesque and inviting. A run of three or four miles a day should be the minimum.

Who is the author of the slang phrase, "and that's right, too"? Name him, for a thousand dollars reward is offered for his apprehension.

Much credit is due the Winchester Press by reason of its neat typographical appearance.

Break the "slate," and then you will have emancipated the individual.

To vote and vote intelligently is the freeman's right.

JOHN AARON PLUMER.

John Aaron Plumer died last week Friday afternoon, at his late home, Rev. Mrs. J. M. Varney, 23 Maple street, Arlington. For over a year he had been a sufferer from consumption. Up to Thursday night he had been cheerful, bright and hopeful, as he had been all through his illness, although daily growing weaker; but that night he had a bad turn, and Friday, for the first time, he seemed to realize that he was not to get well. He was in his 23d year and most popular among the young people of the town. He graduated from the Arlington high school in the class of '99, and from then up to the time of his illness was in the employ of John C. Paige & Co., Boston. He was a member of the Arlington Boat Club.

The funeral was held Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock, at his late home, Rev. Frederick Gill having charge of the services. A quartet, consisting of Miss Annette S. Wellington, Mrs. M. J. Cohnan and Messrs. Stephen B. Wood and Geo. C. Allen, sang "Lead Kindly Light," "O Paradise," and "Nearer My God to Thee." There were many beautiful floral tributes. The interment was at Augusta, Me.

Rev. S. C. Bushnell will preach in New Bedford tomorrow morning.

A RETROSPECT.

Miss Emma Bennett Reviews Twenty-one Years of Existence of the Y. P. S. C. E.

Perhaps it would be of some interest to us all to take a look backward, and get just a glimpse of what has been going on in our Christian Endeavor ranks during the past 21 years, and if you will have just a little patience and bear with me for a few minutes, I will try and give a few of the events connected with one of the most wonderful movements ever organized. Someone has said that "Man can organize a society, God creates a movement," and I think that all must be sure that the Christian Endeavor movement must have been created by none other than God himself, and that in organizing this movement into societies, Dr. Clark only obeyed God's call and carried out His divine command.

The society originated in a revival, which in the winter of 1880-81 blessed the Williston church in Portland, Me.

There had been for several years much earnest work in that church among the young people. Rev. Francis E. Clark, then the pastor of the church, had been conducting a large pastor's class of boys and girls, whose members were bound to their work by pledges very similar to the present C. E. pledge.

A girls' missionary band, the Mepah circle, had been conducted by the earnest wife of the pastor, and so when it seemed necessary to introduce new methods in order to set to work the enthusiastic young converts made by the revival, the soil was already for the planting. And on the evening of Feb. 2, 1881, the first Y. P. S. C. E. was formed in the pastor's study, with essentially the present constitution, pledge and methods of work.

The first signer was W. H. Pennell, who afterwards became the first president of the United Society and also one of its trustees. Mr. Pennell died in 1889. His son, H. B. Pennell, led the first prayer meeting of the society, and Grandville Staples was the first president.

So successful was the society in the Williston church that Dr. Clark was led to publish an account of the new methods of work for young people. His article, "How Our Church Cares for Its Young People," published in August, 1881, in the Congregationalist, and a similar article published later in the Sunday School Times, created widespread interest and like societies began to multiply.

In October, 1881, the second C. E. society was formed by Rev. C. P. Mills, of Newburyport, Mass., and before the end of the year four societies were formed; one each in Rhode Island, Maine, Vermont and Ohio.

Without concerted effort and almost without notice, the C. E. ideas were scattered abroad and took root in widely scattered localities. A little more than a year after the organization of the first society, when only six societies were recorded, on June 2, 1882, the first C. E. convention was held at the Williston church, and when on June 2, 1888, the second convention was held the six societies had grown to fifty-three with an enrolled membership of 2630. Forty-one of these societies were in New England, five in New York, and the rest scattered throughout the west as far as California.

Early in the next year, March 27, 1884, the C. E. cause took another advance step with the formation of the Junior Y. P. S. C. E. society, organized by Rev. J. W. Cowan, of Tabor, Iowa.

When the third national convention was held at Lowell, Mass., on October 22, 1884, there were 151 societies with 6444 members reported. At the fourth convention, held at Old Orchard, Me., July 9-10, 1888, the United Society of C. E. was founded and incorporated. Hon. W. J. Van Faten became president in place of W. H. Pennell, with Rev. George M. Ward as general secretary. To the convention came the good news that C. E. had taken wings and crossed the ocean, and societies were reported from China, the Hawaiian Islands and other distant lands. By this time there were 253 societies with 14,882 members. It was during this year that William Shaw, the president of the United Society, and George B. Graff became connected with the movement.

In October, 1886, another advance step was taken in the establishment of the Christian Endeavor organ, The Golden Rule, now known as the Christian Endeavor World. This paper, by its wide influence and circulation, has contributed largely to the multiplication and usefulness of the C. E. societies.

Still another great and important step was taken after the convention of 1886, when Rev. F. E. Clark, the founder of the movement, accepted the call of the convention, resigned his important pastorate in South Boston, and became president of the United Society, and editor-in-chief of the Golden Rule.

It was during this year that there was inaugurated the practice of observing C. E. day, a day which has now become noteworthy wherever Christianity is known. At the eighth convention, which was held at Philadelphia, John Willis Baer was elected general secretary, which position he has since filled.

At the tenth convention, held in Minneapolis in 1890, the enrollment of the movement has grown to 100,000. There were 75,000 young people pledged to give two cents a week to foreign missions. Mr. Baer also reported 855 junior societies, and since that time the junior movement has gone forward by leaps and bounds, for at the very next convention held the next year in New York, the number had increased to 2,574 while the next year the enrollment had taken another kangaroo leap and reached 10,000. The state of Illinois, leading the list with 433 societies. Prominent among the workers who have brought about the development of the junior work are Mrs. F. E. Clark, Mrs. Alice May Scudder, and Miss Kate H. Haus, whose address and books and pamphlets have done much good. But a large host deserves to be mentioned who have produced some of the C. E. movement has produced some of the many able workers as the junior society, and so many workers who have been moved by an enthusiastic consecration.

Nearly all the state unions now have their superintendents of junior work who devote their time to the development of the junior cause and the increase of junior societies. At one of our own state conventions the motto for the year was "Our boys and girls for Christ," and it seems to me that it would be a wise thing if every individual Young People's society should adopt this motto and work with this in mind.

Had I the time I would like to give somewhat in detail the organization of other important branches of our work as it is being done through the Intermediate, the Senior and the Mother societies but there are a few things which it seems to me will be of practical use to us right here and which ought at this time to be mentioned. But these I will mention some of the branches of the wonderful C. E. tree which we have begun to get a glimpse of. I think that the most of us believe in a practical Christianity, and that the motto of the C. E. has put to practical use some of the very best methods in our hands. It is not satisfied with working just within its own church, community or town but it endeavors to obey the Master's command to "go." While not in any way neglecting the home work, it has reached out a helping hand in many ways to those less fortunate than we. It has followed our sailor boys—they left home and loved ones, both in our navy and our merchant ships, and today you will find floating Endeavor societies on many of these floating homes of so many of our brothers. It has also gone into the prisons and even the prison bars cannot stop its influence. There are also societies among the life-savers, the railroad men and other places where we might least expect to find them. One society has been reported among the squad of policemen connected with a certain station in one of our western cities. It has gone into the ranks of our army, and also the armies of other lands, and good that its influence has wrought can never be estimated except by Him who is our redeemer.

C. E. encloses the globe today, for there is not a land where C. E. is not "known." Russia was the last to fall into its arms, thus making our circle complete, and proving that it is adapted to all lands and all people. It is not justly claim that it is inter-national, inter-racial, and inter-denominational. I want just to mention some of the things which I think have made it such a power for good in all lands.

It recognizes in every human being a brother, and if true to its principles it endeavors to lift that brother to higher levels. And while it believes firmly in loyalty to one's own church, yet it can be easily adapted to all Protestant denominations, and at the same time loyal to all.

I was told recently at society headquarters that there are more than 150 different Protestant denominations that have their C. E. societies and it works equally well in all.

One of the important outgrowths of C. E. is the formation of the band that is known as the Comrades of the Quiet Hour, those Endeavorers that have pledged themselves to spend at least fifteen minutes each day in communion with God and the study of His Kingdom. Another equally important branch is the Tenth Legion, those Endeavorers who have pledged themselves to give one-tenth of their income to the Lord for the advancement of His Kingdom. In each of these last named branches there are nearly thirty thousand young people enrolled. Let anyone should have the idea that Christian Endeavor is on the decline, let me say that during the year ending January, 1902, more than 1500 new societies have been formed, and at the present time there are over 62,000 Young People's societies, with a total membership of more than three and one-half millions. In our own beloved Bay state there are 1573 societies with a membership of 94,740. One more encouraging fact I must mention, and then I must close. During the year just passed more than 160,000 young people have joined the church from our Endeavor ranks. Last year, Feb. 2 was especially observed as "Decision day," when the importance of immediate decision and open confession of Christ by joining the church was brought home to many associate members and others, and God wonderfully blessed the efforts put forth.

"Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength," let us continue our work for Him.

The Arlington High school hockey team won its third and last game in the Interpreparatory league series, on Spy pond, last week Friday, defeating Roxbury High school by the score of 7 to 0. The game was most uninteresting as the visitors only once approached Arlington's goal. The line up:

NO FIVE YEAR LIMIT.

No five year limit is the watchword of all who oppose the project of Senator C. B. Williams, who desires to prevent town treasurers from serving more than five years continuously. There is still reason to keep up the fight against the measure, although the protests which have swamped the senate during the past two weeks render it unlikely that any such legislation will be allowed. Senator C. R. Day, who is the prominent member of the committee on towns which is to consider the bill, is personally opposed to the scheme and will doubtless be able to renounce it. Mr. Day comes from the town of Blackstone and says the towns in his section are opposed to a curtailment of their rights, when they wish to keep a faithful treasurer in office. It would seem that the sentiment is not all confined to Lexington and Belmont, and the towns as a whole will oppose the bill. Nevertheless it will do no harm to continue the fight against it.

ELECT ANNUALLY.

An effort is to be made in Lexington at the coming town meeting to change the system of electing one selectman each year for a term of three years to the former plan of annual elections of the entire board. This was attempted last year, but owing to what was declared a defect in the vote, as the change was not made at an annual election, it will be necessary to pass the vote again in order to make the desired change. For many years it was the plan everywhere to elect the selectmen of a town annually, but about 20 years ago the state gave towns the option of the two plans. Many towns jumped at the innovation of three year terms and it was thought the plan would prove a huge success. That it has not is manifest, judging from the overwhelming majority of towns which now have reverted to the former plan of annual elections. More than four out of every five towns throughout the state elect each year the entire board, and the tendency would seem to be all in that direction. Now and then a town seems fit to adopt the three-year plan as an experiment, but to hold to it is rather the exception than the rule. "Trust the people" is surely a good motto in a republic, and nowhere is the pure type of a democratic form of government so manifest as in the towns. No selectman should be afraid to have his record passed upon by his constituents at least once a year.

James P. Monroe appeared before the legislative committee on election laws, last week Tuesday, to oppose the petition asking that women be granted the right to vote on the license question. He said he was not a saloon keeper and had never been inside a saloon. He said he was a strong advocate of true temperance. He opposed the bill, he said, in the cause of true temperance. He agreed with Mr. Latham that to carry Boston for no-license would be a serious blow to temperance, and gives and speak-easies would multiply, places which would have a greater influence for harm than the licensed saloon. He believed the bringing of women into politics would mean the marshaling of all the women who believe in perpetuating the saloon. He said prohibition was not the solution of the saloon and had been proven so wherever it had been tried. He believed the worst blow to the scientific study of temperance would come through the accidental carrying of Boston for prohibition.

For the past two weeks, groceries of all description have been added quietly to the stock in trade and the shelves have literally been packed. The arrangement in the store was carefully planned and shows how every bit of space may be utilized to advantage. And yet the place does not have the appearance of being overcrowded.

OUR BIRDS AT HOME

By JAMES SPEED

IV.—The Mocking Bird and the Cardinal.

Of all our native song birds the mocking bird is pre-eminent the favorite. Like most of our thrushes, he is rather a friendly bird and is often seen and heard in our dooryards in the country.

His song! Who has not listened to it, intralled at its wonderful range? I am now speaking of his own song and not his mocking of other feathered songsters. This song of his is a typical thrush song, but is very much fuller and grander than that of any other. When he sings, how he throws all his soul into his soft, cooing notes, and, again, when his loud, clear notes ring out, how bright and clear they are!

Often when in the midst of his own varied song he will suddenly, without even checking himself, launch into a whole concert of his feathered friends of wood and field. These imitations are not simple mimicry. They are often an improvement on what he has heard. Whatever song he imitates, he fills out the weak and thin parts and soon makes it strong and broad in sound and feeling.

When listening to a mocker in full riot of song, you feel that it cannot be simply a bird singing. It seems as if there must be a soul behind it all, which gives to the song its depth of feeling and pathos. Often his spirit seems to soar upward with his song, and he can no longer stay on the high bough he has selected, but flies upward with drooping tail and slow fluttering wings. Even then he does not cease singing, but the song continues during his short flight, and he returns singing as when he left.

He mounts to the top of some bush or low tree and opens his sylvan concert early in the morning. Listen! His own song comes full throated from his small gray body. Then, without a break, the robin's blurred matins come to you on the fresh morning air. Listen closely! The partridges are giving their low morning calls huskily from the dewy grass. No; it is our own mocking bird. Now come the pewee's long, plaintive call and the meadow lark's clear, cool whistle. The dandy jay's harsh notes sound, and he gives us several of his own rich notes without a seeming break. And thus for half an hour he concertizes, seemingly for the mere pleasure the use of his own voice gives him. There seems to be no tiring his voice, for whether it is a clear high note or a low harsh one he gives it with perfect ease, sitting quietly with his head turned slightly to one side.

This exquisite voice, which he revels in, has been the cause of his being so eagerly sought after by bird fanciers. Like all of our native song birds, he does not often breed in confinement, and so he has to be caught and caged. He is to me more than a bird, for his song seems to show that there must be a glimmer of a soul somewhere in that little gray body. I know that he sings well in a cage, but some of our greatest songs have been sung by those whose hearts have been hurt beyond repair. And may not this little gray bird use his voice to recall the woods and fields which are his by birthright?

Some one may smile when he sees that I speak of a bird soul. Why not a glimmer of what we call our inner self in this songster? Does he not appeal to and lift your inner self to higher and better life when you listen in rapt attention to his song? Why is it that all nature soothes you and makes you come nearer to the Creator of it if there is not soul in it all? Why does a glorious sunset, with its soft blues and grays and seeming endless tints between, make a troubled day close with a feeling of the good in it all if there is not soul everywhere? Does not a painter put the best of his inner self on his canvas and the composer place the best of his in the written score? Then how much more must the Creator have put of his own life into the broad canvas which he stretches across the west each evening and into the music he has written in bird song! This certainly must be the something which appeals to us in all nature.

The mocker sings best during spring and summer, although a continued warm bit of weather in winter will sometimes start his song. But when he goes singing in the winter days it is only a suggestion of what he will do when he goes wooing in the strong spring sunlight.

The bird is of a dull brown color with a slight ashen tinge. Some of the long quills in the wing are white toward the base. These markings show a large white patch as the bird flies by you. The two middle tail feathers are dark brownish black. The two outer feathers are white. The rest are white on their inner webs. The under surfaces are dull white with a grayish tinge. This bird measures about nine inches in length, of which about five is tail.

Every one knows the cardinal. Those who have known him for years enjoyed the prominence which James Lane Allen's "Kentucky Cardinal" gave him. It made those who had not made his acquaintance anxious to meet him at once, so he has become one of our best known birds. He deserves the prominent place which he occupies, for he is unusual in being both a bird of brilliant plumage and fine song.

The cardinal stays with us summer and winter. Of course, in the winter he is more noticeable, not alone because of his conspicuous color, but also on account of the dearth of bird life. He is not a very sociable bird and except in cold weather is commonly not seen close to houses, but if the weather is bad and there are trees with berries on them about the house he will be seen often and will not appear shy. One day as I sat at the window during a heavy snowstorm I saw several fly into a dogwood tree and feed on the bright red berries. After a number of years the picture remains bright in my memory's gallery, the cardinals showing in sharp contrast against the leaden sky and the silent white ground. They are very fond of the berries of our common red cedar, and these trees also serve them for winter quarters when the north wind blows.

His fine coat and brilliant life notes have been the cause of the cardinal's frequent captivity. To me there is no sadder sight than one of our native song birds in a cage. Canaries seem in place in a cage, as they have been cage birds for generations and would starve to death if they were liberated, but our cardinal does not breed in confinement, and the bird fanciers obtain their birds by robbing nests of their young or by trapping full grown birds. There is something in a bird's bright flight of notes when it has all space to fill that appeals to one, but in a close room, coming from behind bars in a half hearted way, it has a rather depressing effect. Bird music to me is "a joy forever." It never palls, but is constantly fresh and bright. Some birds' songs always bring to my mind the sound of running water and the gentle rustling of the leaves in the long, cool vistas of the beech woods. Others flood my memory with the sounds of the harvest fields, and others suggest open stretches of upland grass. The cardinal's notes are fine and clear, but they do not thoroughly satisfy one, for just as you give your whole attention to what seems to be a prelude to a fine song it ceases.

In winter several cardinals are usually seen together and often quite a crowd of white crowned sparrows. These sparrows and juncos will flock with them. They are fond of feeding in brier patches and heavy undergrowth, such as are found in old deserted fields and fence rows. During the winter the cardinal uses only his call notes and does not give his full whistle. A bright, warm day will sometimes woo him into song. The song then is given almost in a whisper. Indeed it is so faint that you might suppose he was repeating it to himself that he might not forget it before the next mating season.

He has several names besides the Kentucky cardinal. He is known as reddbird, Virginia nightingale and cardinal grosbeak.

The cardinal's coat is really cardinal except for a line of black feathers surrounding the bird's bill. This line becomes a large and conspicuous black spot just under his bill. The heads of both the male and female are surmounted by a very handsome crest. The bill is a very brilliant cardinal color. The female is much duller in color than the male, the cardinal being tinged with gray. The cardinal is about eight inches long.

The nest is usually built in a cedar and not far from the ground. Four very beautiful eggs are laid. Their ground color is white, thickly marked with spots of ashy and reddish brown.

LESSON VII, FIRST QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, FEB. 16.

Text of the Lesson, Acts v. 25-42. Memory Verses, 40-42—Golden Text, Matt. v. 10—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Copyright, 1901, by American Press Association.]

25. "Behold, the men whom ye put in prison are standing in the temple and teaching the people." This was the message which was brought to the high priest, council and senate of the children of Israel as they waited to receive the prisoners whom they had arrested the evening before. Multitudes of men and women were believing, and multitudes of sick and demon possessed people not only in Jerusalem, but also from the cities roundabout, were healed. The work was going so grandly that the high priest and Sadducees simply could not stand it and so put the apostles in prison. God, whose they were and whom they served, sent an angel by night and released them from prison and sent them to the temple to continue their ministry, and there they are found teaching, instead of in the prison under the power of the authorities. They belonged to God.

26-28. "Behold, ye have filled Jerusalem with your doctrine and intend to bring this man's blood upon us." The high priest reminds them that they had been forbidden to teach in the name of Jesus and then adds this word, unintentionally giving good testimony to their zeal, but evidently forgetting that the people had cried, "His blood be on us and on our children" (Matt. xxvii, 25).

29-32. "We ought to obey God rather than men." Thus replied Peter and again accused them to their faces of being the murderers of Jesus, whom God raised from the dead and exalted with His right hand to be a Prince and a Saviour to give repentance and forgiveness of sins even to such as they were. That it is not possible to please God and to please the world lying in the wicked one is seen in Gal. i, 10; Luke xvi, 13; Jas. iv, 4. These apostles were in conscious partnership with the Holy Spirit, who was in them, and He, the Spirit, was the speaker through their lips, even as Jesus had said, "It is not ye that speak, but the Spirit of your Father which speaketh in you" (Matt. x, 20).

33. "When they heard that, they were cut to the heart and took counsel to slay them." Not only was the blood of Jesus upon them, but they were ready to bring upon themselves the blood of the apostles also. Before they killed Jesus they desired to kill Lazarus, whom Jesus raised from the dead (John xii, 10). The truth of God when not meekly received makes manifest that "the carnal mind is enmity against God" (Rom. viii, 7).

34-35. "Ye men of Israel, take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men." The apostles, being sent out of the council for a little while, Gamaliel, a learned and honorable member, at whose feet Saul of Tarsus had been educated (chapter xxii, 3), thus begins to address his brethren. He seems to have had something of the spirit of Joseph and Nicodemus, who also were at one time members of the council (Mark xv, 43; John vii, 50). We do not know that he ever received Jesus as the Christ, but from the wisdom and spirit of this address and on the supposition that Saul would seek the welfare of his teacher we may hope that he did.

36, 37. "Before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody." He quotes two cases of deceivers who for a time had quite a following, but in each case the leaders perished, and their followers were dispersed. The mark of a deceiver is that "he boasts himself to be somebody," while a true follower of the Lord seeks to glorify God only. The antichrist shall do according to his own will and shall exalt himself and magnify himself (Dan. xi, 36), but the Lord Jesus Christ sought neither His own will nor His own glory (John vi, 38; viii, 50), and Paul, the great apostle, determined to know nothing but "Jesus Christ and Him crucified," his mottoes being "Not I, but Christ," "Not I, but the grace of God" (I Cor. ii, 2; xv, 10; Gal. ii, 20).

38. "If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught." He may have remembered these words, "The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to naught; He maketh the devices of the people of none effect" (Ps. xxxiii, 10; see also Isa. viii, 9, 10, for very strong words in this connection). It is a great comfort to the true believer to know that they that war against him shall be as nothing and as a thing of naught and that no weapon formed against him can prosper (Isa. xlii, 12; liv, 17).

39. "If it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it, lest haply ye be found even to fight against God." It is written that "every purpose of the Lord shall be performed," and "The Lord of Hosts hath sworn, saying, Surely as I have thought, so shall it come to pass, and as I have purposed, so shall it stand," and again, "The counsel of the Lord standeth forever, the thoughts of His heart to all generations" (Jer. ii, 29; Isa. xiv, 24; Ps. xxxiii, 11).

40. "They commanded that they should not speak in the name of Jesus." With the repetition of this ungodly and rebellious command they are beaten and let go. How the devil hates that name at which every knee shall yet bow and concerning which every tongue shall yet confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father! (Phil. ii, 10, 11). Jesus had told His disciples that they would be delivered up to councils and be scourged and brought before governors and kings for His sake (Matt. x, 17, 18).

41. "Rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for His name." What a glorious reality is the Lord Jesus to those who can take such treatment, not only without resentment, but even joyfully! Backs scourged and bleeding, full of pain physically, but full of joy inwardly—how great is the grace of God! They were already tasting that which Paul was afterward told concerning the great things he must suffer for Christ's sake (chapter ix, 16).

42. "And daily in the temple and in every house they ceased not to teach and preach Jesus Christ." Thus they obeyed God rather than man and were ready for the next beating or imprisonment for so doing whenever God might see fit to let it come. As Peter and John said, they could not help doing it; like Jeremiah, when tempted to speak no more in His name, they had such a burning fire within them that they were weary if they did not speak; or, like Elihu, they felt that they would burst if they did not speak (Acts iv, 20; Jer. xx, 9; Job xxxi, 18-20).

Widow Jason's Hogs

By PAUL CAREW
Copyright, 1901, by A. S. Richardson.

Widow Jason was the relict of Farmer Jason, and she carried on the farm after his death with even more wisdom than he had shown himself possessed of. She was still on the brighter side of forty, fair to look upon and was at peace with all her neighbors until the one to the east of her sold out and a stranger moved in.

He was a man of middle age named Chisholm, and, being a widower, his sister managed the house for him. If the Widow Jason was one of those who wondered what sort of man he was, she was the first to find it out. Among her live stock that year were a dozen hogs, and it was the fault of her hired man that there were holes in the fences through which they made their way into the potato field of the new neighbor. She had just finished her breakfast one morning when Chisholm was announced. He had the courtesy to lift his hat and give his name, but he also had the bluntness to add:

"Madam, your infernal hogs have rooted up half an acre of potatoes for me, and if you can't manage to keep 'em home I'll shoot every one of 'em!" She looked at him and saw that he was above the ordinary and felt that had she been introduced in the conventional way she would have been pleased to make his acquaintance. But his rude greeting angered her, and, being a woman with a mind of her own, she at once replied:

"I can pay for all the potatoes on your farm, and if you come here to threaten me you'll find a woman who don't scare!"

"Well, you keep your hogs at home." "And you keep yourself in the same place."

That was the first tilt. The fences were mended and the hogs were in despair when a high wind blew a gate open, and the drove spent the night in the same potato field. Next morning Chisholm drove ten of them home and said to Widow Jason:

"Madam, there are dead hogs belonging to you in my field. Will you have them removed or shall I bury them?"

"You killed them, did you?" she asked.

"I did. I told you I would, and I did."

"Then I'll have the law on you."

"Go ahead."

She went to law, and there was a suit, and she was ingloriously beaten.

JOSH FOUND HIMSELF A LICKED MAN.

Womanlike she felt pretty bitter over it, but at the same time she had to give Mr. Chisholm credit for lack of any bitterness. He stated his case in the mildest manner and even spoke highly of her as a neighbor. When she returned home after the lawsuit, she said to her hired man:

"Josh, if that man Chisholm comes on my land again I want you to throw him off."

"Yes'm, I'll do it," replied the sturdy Josh.

It wasn't a fortnight before Chisholm came. He was on his way to the house when Josh headed him off and ordered him back. He refused to go, and Josh laid hold of him to do the throwing act, but found himself a licked man in about three minutes. While he sat on the ground with a handful of grass to his bleeding nose the victor passed on to the woman, who had witnessed the fracas from the front steps. Lifting his hat, he said:

"Madam, those hogs of yours have been at it again—this time in my cornfield—and I've had to kill another."

"Have you dared to kill another of my hogs?" she demanded as her cheeks flamed and her eyes flashed.

"I have. Shall I bury him?"

"Sir, you are a scoundrel!"

"And you are a charming widow!"

She drove to town at once to see her lawyer. There was $10 in the case for him, win or lose, and he advised her to sue. She sued and got beaten again.

The defendant referred to her in the highest terms, but he also proved that her fences were out of repair. The lawyer saw $10 more in it, win or lose, and advised Josh to prosecute for assault and battery. Josh brought his swollen nose and black eye into court and was beaten by several lengths. He had provoked the encounter, and if he had got the worst of it the law could help him.

It was a month before anything further happened. The fences around the hog lot were thoroughly repaired, and for four weeks the porkers had to make the best of their sad lot. Then Josh left the bars down one night, and as the widow was getting breakfast she heard the crack of a rifle. Half an hour later Mr. Chisholm appeared to say:

"Good morning, Mrs. Jason. Those wretched hogs of yours rooted up my garden last night, and this morning I killed another of them. If you want another lawsuit, I'll drive you to town in my own buggy."

"And you—you've shot another?" she gasped.

"I have."

"Then I'd like to shoot you! You are the meanest man in the state of Ohio!"

"Yes'm," he replied, with a bow as he turned away.

Widow Jason drove to town to consult her lawyer again. There was $10 in it for him, win or lose, but this time Mr. Chisholm was arrested for malicious persecution. In his testimony he referred to the plaintiff as "that lady" and exhibited no animus whatever, but he also proved that he was the one persecuted. The widow's hogs would not let him alone. She was beaten again, and this time a stout pen was built, and the hogs were shut up. The farmers had of course taken sides. Some contended that Chisholm had exhibited a mean and unneighborly spirit and others that the widow had been derelict in not mending her fences, and there was much talk and discussion. It occurred now and then that the two principals met on the highway or at the crossroads meeting house, but while Chisholm lifted his hat and bowed as if there was nothing on his mind the widow, except for her blazing eyes, seemed carved of stone.

That pen held the hogs for a long six weeks, but hogs have their weak points, and patience and perseverance will seek them out. The hot sun warped a board and made an opening, and the industrious swine enlarged it until one night they all passed out and headed straight for the next farm. They fetched up among the cabbages, pumpkins, squashes, melons and carrots, and during the long hours of darkness they ran riot. They were missed from the pen early next morning, and the widow sat down on the doorstep and cried. She cried because she was vexed, and she cried because she was a woman. Every minute she expected to hear the crack of Chisholm's rifle, and she fully realized that any further appeal to the law would be wasted. She was vexed at the hogs, at Josh and at Chisholm. Her tears were still falling when the new neighbor stood before her and bowed and said:

"Mrs. Jason, those blamed hogs of yours damaged me a hundred dollars' worth last night."

"And how many more have you killed?" she asked.

"None. I've just driven 'em home."

"But why—why?"

"Because I see how it is. I must either kill off your whole drove or build a pen myself. I shall come over tonight to talk to you about it."

He appeared an hour after supper, and it was 11 o'clock before he went home. Even then the "talk" was not finished. As a matter of fact it required a great many evenings and was only concluded one winter's night when she laid her head on his shoulder and said:

"If you are really sure that you love me, then the farm, the hogs and I are yours, and we'll be married New Year's day."

A Fenimore Cooper Letter.

An autograph collector of Philadelphia has in his possession the following letter written by James Fenimore Cooper to his publishers in 1831:

"I hope you will be wrong in anticipating a bad reception for 'The Bravo.' I cannot tell you much of its reception in Europe, though Gosselin says it is very decidedly successful in France. America is, of all countries, one of the least favorable to works of the imagination. In Europe, or, rather, in England, where there has existed a necessity of accounting for some success in the very teeth of their prejudices and wishes, it has been the fashion to say that no writer ever enjoyed so favorable an opportunity as I because I am an American and a sailor. As to the sailor part of the business, it is grossly absurd, for what advantage has an American sailor over any other? They know the falsehood of what they say in this respect, for I can get £3,000 for a nautical tale that shall celebrate English skill tomorrow. For myself, I can write two European stories easier than I can write one American. Why, Europe itself is a romance, while all America is a matter of fact, humdrum, common sense region from Quiddy to Cape Florida."

German Students and Beer.

To speak of the pleasures of the German student and make no mention of beer would be like the play of "Hamlet" with the part of the melancholy Dane left out. As the student strolls about the country or the city, in the music halls and theaters, at his social gatherings of all kinds, at dinner or at supper, he steadily drinks his beer. The code of health drinking and the etiquette of the drinking bout are complicated and most punctually observed.

All university functions include a great drinking bout—jubilees of renowned professors, club anniversaries, ceremonies in honor of a retiring professor. Any and every ceremony is incomplete without the formal knepel with toasts. He has attempted to throw a poetical glamour around beer, to invest it with the charm of tradition and to hallow it with old associations of college days.

In Europe the American prefers to drink water, and this is a great mystery to the Germans, who cannot possibly understand how they can prefer this to beer.—Detroit Free Press.

ON THE BRINK OF THE....
BIG SPRING
By Thomas P. Montfort
Copyright, 1901, by A. S. Richardson

In the Ozark mountains there is a spring that could tell some startling tales and explain away the mystery surrounding the disappearance of more than one human being.

Jack Warner thought that he had made an important discovery, and the next minute he found that he had made two of them.

In the first place, he had discovered a "moonshine" distillery, which was important, but not interesting to him. In the next place, he was a prisoner in the hands of the "moonshiners" themselves, which was both important and interesting.

For two long hours in the stormiest of nights Jack had toiled wearily up a narrow ravine in the wildest of the Loosen his feet, boys, so he can step along."

They cut the cord about Warner's legs and started forward into the woods. But a woman, her face white and anxious, her hair flying wildly in the wind, barred their way.

"For God's sake, Liz," the man with the gun cried, "what's up?"

"They're here!" she gasped. Then, clasping her hands and looking into his face appealingly, she added: "Go, quick, Jake! Fly before they get you."

"What are you talking about?" Jake demanded. "Who is it? Not the—"

"Yes, yes; the revenuers! The cabin's surrounded, and they're searching the woods. I slipped away, but most likely they seen me. Don't wait, Jake, but go quick!"

His face darkened, and a dangerous light came to his eyes.

"D— 'em!" he said bitterly. "Let 'em come! I'll get some of 'em before they get me." Then, turning to his men, he added: "Stand back out of the light, boys, so that you can't be seen. Wait a minute! This man has been spying on us, and we'll fix him for it first."

With that he struck off into the woods, commanding two of his men to follow with Warner and the others, with Liz, to hide.

After covering about thirty yards along the side of the mountain he stopped on the brink of a dark hole. It was the Big spring, that greedily swallows up everything that falls a prey to it and gives nothing back.

A cold chill of horror went over Warner as he heard the water boiling and bubbling down there in the dark.

"Throw him in, boys," Jake said coolly.

The men began to push Warner forward. In his struggles the rope slipped from his arms. Finding his hands free, he wrenched himself from the grasp of one of the men and, striking him a quick blow, sent him reeling back toward the spring. There was a scream, a heavy splash in the water and then silence. Quickly following up his advantage, he struggled to free himself from the other man and had almost succeeded when Jake gave him a push that sent him flying over the brink of the spring and clear to the opposite side, where he struck against the bank.

As he began to sink down into the hole he clutched frantically in search of a support. When half his body was in the water, his fingers grasped a jutting stone that checked his fall. There he hung, his whole weight on his fingers and the waters tugging at him as if angrily determined to tear him away.

By a flash of lightning Jake saw him clinging to the wall and, with an oath, started around to that side of the spring. In another flash Warner saw Jake with his gun raised to strike him.

At the same instant there was a pistol report, and in the darkness Warner felt a heavy body plunge past him and heard a great splash in the water. Then, just as his fingers had begun to relax their hold, a pair of strong hands grasped his wrists and saved him from sinking. For the first time in his life he faltered.

When he returned to consciousness, he was lying before a fire in the shelter of the still with a dozen detectives. Three of the "moonshiners" were in irons.

The detectives, guided by the scream of the man who had first met his fate in the spring, had arrived just in time to give Jake to the spring, which no doubt hid much of his guilty past. Afterward they had captured the rest of the gang, killing one in the fight. The woman Liz had escaped.

Guided by Himself.

The father of Thomas Jefferson died in 1757, and the son's situation was touchingly described by him years afterward in a letter written to his eldest grandson when he was sent from home to school for the first time. It is given in "The True Thomas Jefferson," by William E. Curtis. The letter was as follows:

"When I recollect that at fourteen years of age the whole care and direction of myself was thrown on myself entirely, without a relative or friend qualified to advise or guide me, and recollect the various sorts of bad company with which I associated from time to time, I am astonished that I did not turn off with some of them and become as worthless to society as they were."

"I had the good fortune to become acquainted very early with some characters of very high standing and to feel the incessant wish that I could become as they were."

His father left instructions for his education and especially enjoined upon the widow not to permit him to neglect "the exercise requisite for his body's development." This strong man knew the value of strength and used to say that a person of weak body could not have an independent mind.

Statistics About the Lakes.

The following figures obtained from reliable sources show the mean level of the lake surfaces above the mean tide at New York and their maximum depths respectively: Lake Ontario, 246.61 feet, 738 feet deep; Lake Erie, 572.86 feet and 210 feet deep; Lake Michigan, 581.28 feet, 870 feet deep; Lake Huron, 581.28 feet, 750 feet deep; Lake Superior, 601.78 feet, 1,008 feet deep. DANCING ASSEMBLY.

The second dancing assembly, in a series of three given by Miss Grace A.
Dwelle, Oscar A. Schnitzer and Fred R. White took place last night. Many out of town guests as well as the usual number from the Heights were present, making a good-sized and attractive gathering. As it came on St. Valentine's night, the hall was uniquely decorated for the occasion, presenting a very pleasing appearance. The windows were draped with red crepe-paper streamers looped back at the sides and the electric bulbs were covered with the same material. Red streamers crossed and recrossed overhead, forming a lattice work canopy. A red hoop suspended from the central chandelier was hung with red hearts and the balcony was adorned with red streamers under which was a line of small hearts. At one end of the hall were the words "St. Valentine's" done in red hearts, and the platform was draped with streamers. Above the platform were large red hearts, and in the centre an immense Cupid. Unique favors consisting of red and white peppermint hearts tied with red and white ribbons and painted with Cupids were used in a simple manner. It was a 12 o'clock party. The tete-a-tete room was hung with rugs and draperies in Oriental effect, in which Carter Hardy served the usual refreshments. Poole's orchestra furnished live music for the dancers.
Mrs. Harry Alderman, of East Lexington, and Mrs. Minot Lawrence of Arlington, were matrons, dressed in becoming decolette gowns, the former being in black crepe de chine with lei trimmings, and the latter in black satin with chiffon trimmings and a red corsage bow. Miss Grace Dwelle was uniquely gowned in white muslin with tiny red hearts at all points.

BOX 54 OVERWORKED.

Fire alarm box 54 has been overworked this week, there being three alarms. The first was Tuesday evening about 6 o'clock, for a blaze at the house of Frank Adams, of Sylvia street, caused by a kerosene lamp. The damage was about $30.

Wednesday night, the Lexington &
Boston waiting room caught fire, although the cause, and damage was done to clothing principally.

Thursday evening a lamp in the house of Mrs. Kate Rockwood fell to the floor and set fire to a curtain and a lounge.
The blaze was extinguished by chemicals. In all cases the work was promptly done by the firemen, and the damage all told will not exceed $150.

THE WIDOW BROWN.

The Arlington Heights Dramatic club gave a comedy drama entitled "The Real Widow Brown," at Crescent hall, Tuesday evening. The affair was a success in every way. Geo. H. Averill played popular airs between the acts, and Miss Dora A. Parsons accompanied the singer. The hall and balcony were crowded, and numbers of people were unable to get seats. Will Partidge, in his character of the pretended Widow Brown, brought down the house. Herbert Pierce as Baron von Holstein was very good; in fact, all were good. I. F.
Moore, of the Boston School of Opera, superintended the play. Will Partidge painted the scenery and secured a very good result in representing the exterior of Mr. Goodman's home.

The characters were: Hiram Goodman, a deacon, victim of widows, Temple H. Fay, Granville Hall, in love with Daisy, William M. Lloyd; Charley
Ward, in love with Totty
